

Information for Seasonal workers

If you are thinking about a job in Italy or Europe, there are at least 5 good reasons to consider seasonal work:

- 1- Seasonal jobs could be a great way to start living and working in another European country
- 2 - Seasonal jobs could be a great way to increase your skills
- 3 - As a seasonal worker you are entitled to the same working conditions as national workers
- 4 - Seasonal work is your first step to further job opportunities
- 5 - Seasonal work allows you to develop a wider range of professional contacts

Seasonal work can be a job opportunity for those looking for a job for a fixed term or in any case for a short period; often has as its objective the main one is to offer young people a first work experience, not necessarily professionalizing or linked to one's own course of study and, if carried out abroad, can be a good opportunity to improve the language and learn about ways of life other than your own.

The best time to find a seasonal job in marine areas is summer; while in the mountains, in the winter sports resorts of the northern and central regions, in addition to summer the season is from November to March. In the cities of art there are good opportunities also during the Easter and Christmas holidays.

For seasonal work, the type of contract most frequently applied is that of the fixed term that the employer uses to cope with seasonal peaks of work, that is, an increase in extraordinary and occasional activities that occur in some sectors (Tourism, Trade and Agriculture) and at certain times of the year.

If you aren't an EU national, it's essential to check whether you're eligible to work in Italy before making plans and you may also be required to obtain a visa.

Check with an Italian embassy or consulate in your home country well in advance of your Quota Agreement "decreto-flussi"
